

10 Things You Should Know Before You Select an Animal Communication Teacher

- 1. Look at the photo of the teacher. Do you feel positive energy emanating from them? Do you feel a heart connection? You should get good vibes when looking at their photo.
- 2. Look at the teacher's bio and website. How long have they been teaching? Do they have students from around the world? What do you think of their background? Is their website professional? You should feel like they have the experience and professionalism you are looking for.
- 3. Read the testimonials not only from their communication students but also their communication clients. How do the words of others make you feel? The words should speak to you on a heart and soul level. You should feel that this teacher is not only a great professional communicator, but also a wonderful and impactful teacher.
- 4. Know how the instruction is offered. Is the instruction live or recorded? Sadly, a lot of teachers are apparently going the route of recordings. You listen to pre-recorded instruction or a pre-recorded class. Unfortunately, most students have trouble connecting and learning intuitive skills from recordings. The energy is not the same as that of a live teacher with live support. Often these students are left with the horrible feeling of being a failure after taking such a class. For some, they will even give up at this point when honestly, it is simply a poor format which works for just a small percentage of students.
- 5. Check out what you will be learning in the class. Are you learning solid basics? Are there exercises? Are there documents? A number of students do not know how to ground or are not grounded. The class should spend time grounding so that you can receive messages from the animals more clearly. You should feel like, by the end of the class, that you will be able to communicate with animals.
- 6. Know if you can ask questions during the class. If you have questions and are unable to get answers or receive them immediately, you may get stuck, frustrated or have difficulty learning. You need a teacher you can count on to be there for you.
- 7. Know how the class structure involves fellow students. Are you able to hear from other students during the class? Hearing and being able to talk to the teacher is important and a major benefit of a live in person class or teleclass (done by phone, Skype or web phone.) But also hearing other students contributes to providing a supportive learning environment. You feel like you are part of a team, in this together. This helps to create the positive and inspirational energy needed to learn this unique ability.

- 8. Look into how you practice as part of the class. Do you practice communicating during the class? Does the class involve practicing on your own? Do you receive feedback? Practicing talking to animals and getting validation is a crucial part of learning. Otherwise, your mind often questions what information you received and then doubt and fear can take over.
- 9. Look into what happens after the class. Do you receive a certificate upon completion of the class? Are there practice opportunities after the class is completed? A certificate is important to many students. Practice is vital so that you can continue to hone your skills. Trying to find animals on your own to practice with can be a challenge. It is ideal if the teacher provides a practice group made available to just their own communication students. That way, you can feel like you are still a part of “your” group of like-minded students.
- 10. Look into what other learning opportunities and support the teacher offers. Do they offer an advanced communication class? Do they offer a professional communicator program if you desire to become one? Do they offer intuitive and spiritual articles catered to their animal communication students? Do they offer email support? It is wonderful if your teacher goes the extra mile for you. While not all teachers do this, it is a bonus if they give you an opportunity to keep learning and expanding your abilities.
